LIFE IN THE PHILLIPINE ISLANDS .- While seated one morning in the window of the country residence of my friend Don Arturo, an old Spaniard living in the neighborhood of Manila, conversing with him and his pretty wife on various topics, occasionally sipping a glass of wine, and partaking of some of the yards distant. rich fruits which were placed in an old-fashioned silver tray at our elbows, we at length began to feel anxious for some scene of more activity.

"I will tell you what we will do to amuse ourselves," cried the Spaniard, suddenly, removing his cigar, and glancing up and down the Pesig, which quitely flowed along within a stone's throw of the

"I listen," said I, removing the skin from a goldencolored banana.

"What say you to shooting alligators, my friend? That will be amusement worthy of men who have been through the trying scenes of the earthquake with unshaken nerves. What say you, shall we go?"

I glanced towards the Don as I loaded, and saw During nearly fifteen years I have never that a specific calonnel, as possible. We must fight our way to shore, for arsenic, lead, zinc, iron, antimony, quinine, iodide of potassa, and a whole host of deadly drugs which remain in the system, and are EXTRACTED BY THESE BATHS.

Allen to be one of the party." "Invite him by all means," cried Don Arturo, with warmth. "I will write him a note requesting him to ride over to-night, and start with us in the morning."

"Don't trouble yourself," I answered: I will ride over myself and ask him."

"A good plan, my friend, and worthy of you. Order the best horse in the stable, and let the servant put the old Spanish saddle upon his back-the one rate. that I use."

"This was an act of politeness that I never expected of the Don, as he prized that saddle almost as much as he did his wife.

"I will be back before many hours," I said, as I left the room to dress for my ride.

"I found Mr. Allen at home, and received a warm and I required no urging to join him. After the meal I made my errand known to Allen, who took some

"I readily consented to this plan, and spent an agreeable afternoon in listening to his interesting stories of adventures. Before dark we were at the Spaniard's house, and made all preparations for an early start on the next day. At an early hour we to take the other. retired to rest after dispatching a servant to hire two large banques for the transportation of ourselves and provisions to a small lake up the river.

"We rose at daybreak, partook of a hearty breakfast, swallowed a few cups of coffee that was strong enough to bear an egg, and then walked to the river you value it." banks where the boats were awaiting us. One of the banquos was filled with our tent, blankets and provisions, while the other, which was handsomely decorated, was reserved for ourselves. Four Metis, or half-eastes, were detailed for each boat, to row or use their long poles, as the state of the river's current permitted.

"The alligator," said Don Arturo, as we shot into the stream, lighting a fresh cigar, and reclining his head upon a bundle of pillows, "is a peculiar animal and requires some skill as a marksman to kill appoint them this time." with a rifle shot. This is the season for the females to lay their eggs, so that we shall have plenty of chances to hit them before they take to the water-

"Humph!" grunted Charley, raising a cup of red-colored liquid to his mouth, which had been us; and then all was calm, and the monster's dead wrapped in wet flannels to keep cool.

"Pull, rascals ! and you shall dine off an alligator, if I kill one." Singular as it may appear, the promise did not

This is done to prevent their being swept away during the rainy season, and also for the purpose of resisting the shocks Manila. of earthquakes-flexible supporters yielding as the ground rumbles, and unless the ground opens, the dwellings of the natives are more secure than those of their masters. Frequently, during a slight shock, have I seen the huts sway to and fro, like trees in a s'rong gale, while the occupants preferred remaining indoors to trusting themselves out, well-knowing that if their habitations should fall they would be in not much danger of injury, as the materials were too slight to break the back of a respectable sized flea.

It was nearly eleven o'clock before Don Arturo 20-tf gave orders to the natives to pull for land. We stopped under the shade of large cocoa-tree, unloaded the boats and bidding three of the men follow, to carry our ammunition, started for the lake, about a dozen rods distant. The sheet of water was not very large, covering an extent of about fifty acres; but I think that it was the most beautiful spot I ever saw.

The foliage of the trees was rank with the richness of the soil; while all along the borders of the lake bright colored flowers and dense creeping vines were spread from branch to branch, until even the sun could not penetrate with a single ray. Hundreds of birds, with plumage of the most gaudy description, were fluttering from tree to tree, too tame to be frightened at our approach; while monkeys, with impudent gestures, and bold, defiant chattering, gathered in groups, and wondered why we should thus invade their domains.

Upon arriving at the lake, we found a large raft built of bamboo, which had been left by some sportsmen a few days before tied to a tree. Upon this we determined to embark and try our fortune upon the water. The natives were sent back to the boats for John G. Lewis. paddles, while we proceeded to load our rifles. As

"There is a chance then," Charley said, interrupting the Spaniard, and pointing to what I supposed to be a large log upon the surface of the water. "By Saint Antonia, but you are right !" the Don said, dropping upon his knees for the purpose of steadying his aim, and trembling with nervous impa-"Well," cried Charley, after a moment's pause,

"are you not going to fire?" "In a moment, amiago. Now I think I've got him Honolulu. For terms, enquire of on a line."

He discharged his rifle, and the ball flew harmlessly over the alligator, and struck the water about thirty yards beyond him.

"Did I kill him ?" inquired the Spaniard, springing to his feet. "I should rather think not," answered Allen with a laugh; "what did you aim at?"

"The alligator." "Then the alligator appears to be very much obliged to you; for see, he is swimming this way, and seems determined to make us a call. "Pull for shore !" shouted the Spaniard, dropping his rifle, and grasping a paddle. Charley quietly winked to me, raised his rifle, and the next instant its sharp report reverberated over the lake, and started more than a thousand monkeys into an unearthly chattering. I watched for the ball to strike, and saw the monster raise his head with a sudden jerk, and then lash the water into a white foam with its tail. In another instant he had disappeared beneath its surface. "You have killed him, Charley," I cried.

"Not so," Allen said ; "the ball struck him in the mouth, and to-morrow he will be as well as ever."

He had scarcely finished speaking when a cry from Don Arturo startled us. We turned towards him, and saw he was pointing with a trembling hand towards half-a-dozen black objects which were slowly swimming towards us, and were not more than thirty

"By all the saints in the calender, but we are in his rifle, and ramming down a ball with haste.

"What is the matter?" I inquired. "Don't ask questions, but fire at the nearest one. Hit him in the eye, if you can."

I did not wait for further instructions, but took deliberate aim, and had the satisfaction of seeing the

It appeared as though each discharge of our rifles brought fresh alligators to the surface, for I saw no less than a dozen with their heads out of the water, watching our movements with great interest, and gradually drawing nearer, as if they wished to revenge themselves for the injury inflicted upon their companions. Presently one much larger than the welcome. He was about sitting down to breakfast others darted towards the raft; and when within a few feet, suddenly disappeared from view.
